MINERS LOSE

By a Decision of Court of Last Resort.

UNION'S OFFICERS

Now in an Idaho Jail on Charges of Murder Must Stay There Until They are Tried in Court.

Washington, D. C.—The supreme court of the United States on Monday decided the habeas corpus cases of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone, the representatives of the Western Federation of Miners, who are held in prison in Idaho on the charge of complicity in the murder of ex-Gov. Steunenberg, adversely to the men. Of the men involved Charles H. Moyer is president, W. D. Haywood secretary-treasurer, and George A. Pettibone a member of the Western Federation of Miners. They are now in prison in Canon county, Idaho, under a charge of murdering ex-Gov. Steunenberg, of that state, although it was not charged that they were present when the crime was committed. The case came to this court on an appeal from a decision of the Idaho federal court refusing to grant writs of habeas corpus.

The principal point of controversy was the method by which the Idaho authorities secured jurisdiction over the men. All of them are residents of Colorado, and it was alleged on behalf of Moyer and his associates that they were kidnapped in pursuance of a conspiracy to which the governor of Colorado and the Idaho authorities were parties and hence that jurisdiction was acquired by fraud.

Justice Harlan said that in the habeas corpus proceedings in the United States courts the method of extradition of the defendants was not material. The merits of the cases were not involved as that phase was not presented. The only question involved was the right of the state courts to proceed with the cases, of which there could be no doubt. Justice McKenna delivered a dissenting opinion, holding that Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone had a right to invoke the aid of the federal courts to correct improper methods used in securing their extradition. He said that kidnapping under the law is no more to be justified than when performed outside the law.

REORGANIZATION OF THE CABINET

The President Sends a List of Appointments to the Senate for Confirmation.

Washington, D. C.—Seven cabinet changes and one appointment to the supreme court bench were sent to the senate Monday by President Roosevelt, but they were not confirmed immediately, in accordance with the general custom concerning such important nominations. It is said that there is no opposition to the appointments for the cabinet and to the nomination of Attorney General William H. Moody to be associate justice of the supreme court, despite the fact that it was determined to refer these nominations to committees for report. Heretofore the committees have been polled on the floor of the senate in executive session on cabinet appointments and, out of courtesy to the president, immediately confirmed. The reason advanced for the change in the program is that no message of any character had been received from the president and therefore it would not be proper to transact business. The important nominations follow:

Secretary of the Treasury, George B. Cortelyou; Attorney General, Charles J. Bonaparte; Postmaster General, George Von L. Meyer; Secretary of the Navy, Victor H. Metcalf; Secretary of the Interior, James R. Garfield; Secretary of Commerce and Labor, Oscar S. Scaus; Associate Justice of Supreme Court, William H. Moody.

The first cabinet shift will take place about the first of the year, when Mr. Moody will take his place on the supreme court bench. Mr. Bonaparte will then go to the department of justice, Mr. Strauss will enter the cabinet as secretary of commerce and labor, and Mr. Metcalf will become secretary of the navy. Mr. Shaw will retire March 4, and Mr. Cortelyou will take the treasury portfolio and will be succeeded as postmaster general by George Von L. Meyer. Mr. Garfield will succeed Secretary Hitchcock at the same time.

VAST UPHEAVALS IN JAVA.

In the Outbreak at Sunday Straits a Mountain Sunk in the Sea.

Earthquakes and volcanoes are becoming the fad in fashionable scientific circles. It is a good thing to have a variety of earthquakes. Anyone who has been amid the terrors of a genuine upheaval of the earth's crust will never forget it. All the fine spun theories of theological hair splitters and fake experimenters who dabble with what they call science become rubbish in the presence of the stupendous facts which the earthquakes and volcanoes thunder forth.

In view of what has happened in San Francisco and Chili one can more sincerely appreciate the terrors of that awful display of the earth's power when its crusts are broken upward, as was recorded during the great disasters in Java.

It will be remembered at the time of the outbreak in the straits of Sunday that a spectator standing on a high eminence nearly 20 miles away saw the mountains burst into smoke and steam. When the vapors blew away he looked again and saw the sea sweeping over the place where the mountains had been.

Observing more closely he saw a mountain standing where the sea had swept but a few hours before. A traveler just from Java brings some striking pictures of the many craters and cones dotting the landscape around the mighty volcano of Smeroe.

From these eruptions streaming from the central volcano came rivers of mud and boiling waters. In neighboring outbreaks great forests were upheaved and mountains made.

Serpents, tigers, leopards, elephants and other animals that were roaming the jungle when the earthquake came were seen hours later rolling down the canyons of those mountains, floating in torrents of boiling hot water and roasted alive. Immense pythons and other monstrous serpents from 50 to 100 feet long were among the sights. In some places the skins of leopards and tigers as well as of the serpents were all that could be found except the skeletons within. The flesh had been boiled and washed away.

The inhabitants of Valparaiso and Santiago, if they were old enough, might remember what took place ages ago when the Andes were flung aloft from the great level wilderness of the Amazon, with thousands of wild animals and serpents hurled down the mountain sides in floods of boiling water spouted from volcano geysers.

Objected to Favoritism.

An attaché of the American embassy at London tells a story of a butler in the employ of a fine old English family whose long service had inculcated in him a personal and proprietary interest in the sons and daughters of the house.

Once, on the occasion of a large dinner party, the conscientious butler observed that one of the members of the family, a young girl who had but recently entered society, was devoting an amount of attention to her agreeable neighbor on the right obviously in excess of that accorded to the less fascinating man on her left. This fact perturbed the butler to a degree that could no longer be borne in silence. So, under pretense of passing the culprit a dish, the butler managed to whisper respectfully in her ear:

"A little more conversation to the left, miss."

His Opinion.

"You're extravagant," said uncle. "These cigars are a lot better than the ones I smoked at your age."

"Yes," muttered nephew in an ill-concealed aside, "they're a lot better than what you smoke now."

A Poor Arrangement.

Mother (to convalescing boy)—Now, Bobbie, in case you should want me, just ring this bell.

Bobbie—But, mamma, I'm not strong enough to ring it all the time.
